Skin Marking Set

Intended Use

- Site marking is essential to prevent wrong site surgery and promote patient safety.
- The surgical site mark should not be easily removed with skin preparation but should not be so permanent as to last weeks or months after the surgical procedure.
- Included in the protocol is marking the surgical site for procedures involving incisions, percutaneous punctures or insertions with respect to laterality.
- One of the main issues associated with use of skin markers is the permanence of the mark (i.e., whether the mark will be visible after skin preparation to identify the appropriate surgical site).
